Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to a control group (CON) and an exercise group (EX). The EX group performed a 10-week training program consisting of 3 sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during submaximal exercise at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The EX group showed a significant decrease in HR and HRR at rest and during submaximal exercise compared to the CON group. The results suggest that a 10-week training program can improve cardiovascular fitness in sedentary middle-aged men.

Abstract: This research was designed to investigate the effects of two types of social support on the well-being of individuals who are experiencing chronic pain. The study involved 100 participants who were assigned to one of four groups based on the type of social support they received. The results showed that individuals who received emotional support experienced significantly lower levels of pain and improved quality of life compared to those who did not receive support. These findings suggest that providing emotional support can be an effective intervention for managing chronic pain.

When you visit the Facebook website, you will see that there are 45,000,000 Facebook users. It is a very large number, but it is not the total number of people who use Facebook. It is only the number of people who have a Facebook account. There are many people who use Facebook but do not have a Facebook account. For example, many people use Facebook on their mobile phones, but they do not have a Facebook account. So, the number of people who use Facebook is much larger than the number of people who have a Facebook account.
