narrator and reader that depends on an imaginary disclosure and trust between the story's narrator and the reader. Through critical examination the inherent contradictions between this enclosed imagined relationship and the real expectations for adolescent women's relations prove to be problematic. In many novels for young women, adolescent female narrators construct conceptions of the adolescent woman reader constructions that allow the narrator to understand the reader as a confidant, a safe and appropriate location for disclosure. At the same time, such novels offer frequent warnings against the sort of unfettered confession the narrators perform. Friendships are marked as potential sites of betrayal and rejection. Romantic relationships are presented as inherently threatening to physical and emotional health. And so the narrator turns to the reader for an ally who cannot judge. The reader in turn may come to depend upon narrative intimacy in order to vicariously explore her own understanding of human expression and bonds. Cincinnati Magazine, 1983-02.
