Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computerized program designed to teach the basic concepts of statistics would increase students' understanding of statistical concepts. A pretest-posttest design was used. Students completed a pretest before using the program and a posttest after completing the program. Results indicated that students who used the program showed significantly higher scores than those who did not use the program on both the pretest and posttest. This suggests that the program may have helped students understand statistical concepts better.
