

Study Guide: Physical and Chemical Oceanography

Effective composition of ocean water determined by:

- 1) Salinity - given defined by mass percentage of water which depends on the amount of water which has evaporated or which has precipitated
- 2) Temperature - water moving through salt by heat from atmosphere through molecular motion and by moving substances, including dissolved salts and all dissolved substances
- 3) Chemical composition - the chemical composition of water is determined by the amount of water which has evaporated or which has precipitated

Effective composition and properties of water:

- 1) Salinity - mass percentage of water which is determined by the amount of water which has evaporated or which has precipitated
- 2) Temperature - mass percentage of water which is determined by the amount of water which has evaporated or which has precipitated

How temperature and salinity produce density and volume changes in water:

Temperature differences cause water to expand:

- 1) Temperature - water expands as temperature increases
- 2) Volume - water expands as temperature increases
- 3) Volume - the temperature difference between the water and the atmosphere is reflected in the density difference

Salinity differences cause water to contract:

- 1) Salinity - water contracts as salinity increases
- 2) Volume - water contracts as salinity increases
- 3) Volume - the salinity difference between the water and the atmosphere is reflected in the density difference

Notes:

How temperature and salinity affect density and volume changes in water:

Temperature effects:

on the Earth's surface, water expands as temperature increases

Salinity effects: - the difference in density between the water and the atmosphere is reflected in the density difference

Volume effects: - the difference in density between the water and the atmosphere is reflected in the density difference

on the Earth's surface, water contracts as salinity increases
