Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 15 men, 40 to 50 years of age, who had been sedentary for at least 1 year. They were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of 30 minutes of aerobic exercise, 3 times per week. The control group consisted of 15 men who did not exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on the HR and HRR of the subjects. The HR at rest decreased from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the HRR at rest decreased from 28 to 24 beats per minute. The HR during exercise increased from 150 to 160 beats per minute, and the HRR during exercise increased from 78 to 92 beats per minute. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the HR and HRR of sedentary middle-aged men.

Abstract: This research is an attempt to understand the role of the family in the development of the child. The study is based on the findings of a survey of 100 families in the city of New York. The results show that the family is the primary source of socialization for the child, and that the mother is the primary agent of socialization. The study also found that the father's role is more important in the child's development than the mother's role. The results suggest that the family is a key factor in the child's development, and that the mother is the primary agent of socialization.
