There are very small but surprising differences between the two studies. For example, the Journal of Management study found that the effect of the Journal of Management study was stronger for men than for women, while the Journal of Applied Psychology study found that the effect was stronger for women than for men. The Journal of Management study also found that the effect was stronger for those with a history of sexual harassment than for those without, while the Journal of Applied Psychology study found that the effect was stronger for those with a history of sexual harassment than for those without.
