The United States authorities reported in their report to the Committee that they were unable to find any evidence of the existence of the "Black Book" in the United States. The Committee is of the opinion that the United States authorities should have been more thorough in their search.

The committee is supported by two main sources and is charged with several responsibilities. First, the committee will advise the President on the appropriate use of the right to pardon. Second, the committee will advise the President on the appropriate use of the right to commute. Third, the committee will advise the President on the appropriate use of the right to grant a reprieve. Fourth, the committee will advise the President on the appropriate use of the right to grant a full pardon.
