1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

1. A student in a chemistry lab uses a balance to determine the mass of a sample of a substance. The balance reads 10.25 g.
2. The student then uses a graduated cylinder to measure the volume of the sample. The cylinder reads 2.5 mL.
3. The student then calculates the density of the sample. The density is 4.1 g/mL.
4. The student then uses a thermometer to measure the temperature of the sample. The thermometer reads 25.0°C.

1. Identify the main idea of the passage. The author discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records in a laboratory setting. This is crucial for ensuring the reliability of experimental results and for facilitating the replication of studies by other researchers.
2. Explain the significance of the data presented in the table. The table shows the results of three experiments conducted under different conditions. The data indicates that the reaction rate increases significantly as the temperature rises from 20°C to 40°C, while the effect of concentration is less pronounced. This suggests that temperature is a more critical factor in influencing the reaction rate in this specific system.
