1. A ping fails when you have used traceroute to determine a suboptimal route (R2). This route is suboptimal because there is a better way to reach the other side neighbors connected. Why would the other neighbors suboptimize their route if they are connected to the ping failed destination the same router?

- The highest administrative distance is used to select the best path.
- The highest administrative distance is used to verify a good path.
- The highest administrative distance is used to verify the IP address configured on router R2.
- The highest administrative distance is used to prevent the connectivity from the suboptimal route to reach the destination network.

Explanation:

The other side neighbors connected can be used to prove that Layer 1 and Layer 2 connectivity exists between the Cisco routers. For example, if two routers have duplicate IP addresses, a ping between the routers will fail, but the router on each side connects to the destination. The other side neighbors should also be used to verify that IP addresses on the router are correct. In case the same IP addresses are used on the same router.

2. Which statement is true about EGP and a Cisco device?

- The other side neighbors connected to the router will be connected to a router that is not a Cisco device.
- To disable EGP globally, the router should be configured to use the command no egp.
- EGP is disabled globally on the router by default.
- EGP is not used by the router to reach the EGP peers.

Explanation:

EGP is a Cisco proprietary protocol that uses the routing table to reach the other side of the router. EGP is disabled globally on the router by default. To disable EGP globally, the router should be configured to use the command no egp.
