States of Matter: Solid, Liquid, Gas

In the world around us, everything is made up of tiny particles called molecules. These molecules are always present in different ways to create three main states of matter: solid, liquid and gas. Each has some clear-cut characteristics and they change between them.

Solid: Imagine a brick or a box. Solids are made of many, many tiny particles. These tiny particles are packed very closely together. They are held together by strong forces, and they don't move around much.

Liquid: Now think about water. It flows and takes the shape of its container. In liquids, the molecules are not packed as closely together as in solids. They can move around a bit, but they still stay close together.

Gas: Think of the air you breathe. It fills all around you, but you can't touch it. Gases have molecules that are spread out far more than liquids. They fill up the space around them. There are no fixed boundaries, and the molecules are free to move in all directions.

Changing States: Have you ever seen ice melting? Or water boiling? These are changes from one state to another. When a substance changes from one state to another, it's called a change of state. For example, when ice melts, it changes from a solid to a liquid. When water boils, it changes from a liquid to a gas.

Each change from one state to another is called a phase change. These changes happen because of changes in temperature. When you heat something, it can change from a solid to a liquid, or from a liquid to a gas. When you cool something, it can change from a gas to a liquid, or from a liquid to a solid.

Some changes you might see in everyday life are: ice melting, water boiling, and a candle melting. These are all changes from one state of matter to another.

Now, let's look at some questions about these changes. Try to think about the changes you see in everyday life, and how they relate to the states of matter.
