Ocean Acidification Research and Data Reporting, 2011 The ocean presently takes up one fourth of the carbon dioxide emitted to the atmosphere by human activities thereby increasing ocean acidity While our understanding of the possible consequences of ocean acidification is still rudimentary both the scientific community and the society at large are increasingly concerned about the potential risks associated with ocean acidification for marine organisms and ecosystems The number of scientists involved in ocean acidification research grew rapidly over the past few years and will continue to rise with the launch of new coordinated national programmes Students young researchers and established scientists inexperienced with the intricacies of the seawater carbonate chemistry and perturbation experiments will enter the field and will benefit from guidelines and standards for ocean acidification research The European Project on Ocean Acidification EPOCA and the Intergovernmental Oceanographic Commission IOC initiated the process that led after an open community review to the production of this guide Marine Mammal Populations and Ocean Noise National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Ocean Studies Board, Committee on Characterizing Biologically Significant Marine Mammal Behavior, 2005-02-24 Attention has been drawn to the subject of how ocean noise affects marine mammals by a series of marine mammal strandings lawsuits and legislative hearings and most recently the report from the U S Commission on Ocean Policy One way to assess the impact of ocean noise is to consider whether it causes changes in animal behavior that are biologically significant that is those that affect an animal's ability to grow survive and reproduce This report offers a conceptual model designed to clarify which marine mammal behaviors are biologically significant for conservation purposes The report is intended to help scientists and policymakers interpret provisions of the federal Marine Mammal Protection Act
