- Analogue extensions - for POTS/SLT (single line telephones), faxes, modems, PDQ machines, etc
- IP extensions - ideal for Remote Home Workers and branch offices

How to use this guide

Before providing any phone system the most important thing to know is your customer's requirements.

By following these three simple steps, it's easy to configure a system that will meet their present needs today, and be expandable for future growth.

- 1 Determine the number and type of trunk/lines they need (their connections to the outside world - analogue/ISDN2/ ISDN30 or IP) - this will help establish the type of switch to choose.

- 2 Next, find out how many extensions they require. Extensions can be any of the following: individual users, faxes, DECT, modems, or Remote Home Workers.
 - 3 Finally, determine whether the customer needs additional voice mail, door entry, call queuing, CLI, CTI, etc. Do they require standalone or integrated DECT?
- With this information you can begin to configure the best system for your customer.
- Once you've established your customer's requirements we will be happy to help you with your order and any advice for future add-on sales.
