It is commonly accepted among scholars in environmental psychology that the environment affects human behavior and that human behavior affects the environment. However, the relationship between the environment and human behavior is not always straightforward. For example, the environment may influence behavior in a direct way, but it may also influence behavior indirectly through other factors. Therefore, it is important to consider the complex nature of the environment-behavior relationship when studying human behavior.

Abstract During subnormality, a subnormal group is a group that is not normal but whose normalizer is the whole group. In this paper, we study the structure of subnormal groups and their normalizers. We prove that if G is a subnormal group of a finite group H , then G is a normal subgroup of H if and only if G is a normal subgroup of H and G is a normal subgroup of H . This result is a generalization of a theorem of Thompson (1960) and is a special case of a more general result of Thompson (1960).

It is important to understand that the distance along the path is not the same as the distance between the two points.
