about how this goal might be achieved The rhetoric of standards and vouchers has occupied center stage polarizing public opinion and affording little room for reflection on the intangible conditions that make for good schools Trust in Schools engages this debate with a compelling examination of the importance of social relationships in the successful implementation of school reform Over the course of three years Bryk and Schneider together with a diverse team of other researchers and school practitioners studied reform in twelve Chicago elementary schools Each school was undergoing extensive reorganization in response to the Chicago School Reform Act of 1988 which called for greater involvement of parents and local community leaders in their neighborhood schools Drawing on years longitudinal survey and achievement data as well as in depth interviews with principals teachers parents and local community leaders the authors develop a thorough account of how effective social relationships which they term relational trust can serve as a prime resource for school improvement Using case studies of the network of relationships that make up the school community Bryk and Schneider examine how the myriad social exchanges that make up daily life in a school community generate or fail to generate a successful educational environment The personal dynamics among teachers students and their parents for example influence whether students regularly attend school and sustain their efforts in the difficult task of learning In schools characterized by high relational trust educators were more likely to experiment with new practices and work together with parents to advance improvements As a result these schools were also more likely to demonstrate marked gains in student learning In contrast schools with weak trust relations saw virtually no improvement in their reading or mathematics scores Trust in Schools demonstrates convincingly that the quality of social relationships operating in and around schools is central to their functioning and strongly predicts positive student outcomes This book offer insights into how trust can be built and sustained in school communities and identifies some features of public school systems that can impede such development Bryk and Schneider show how a broad base of trust across a school community can provide a critical resource as education professional and parents embark on major school reforms A Volume in the American Sociological Association s Rose Series in Sociology

Reckoning With Racism in Family-School Partnerships Jennifer L. McCarthy Foubert, 2022 Drawing from the lived experiences of Black parents as they engaged with their children s K 12 schools this book brings a critical race theory CRT analysis to family school partnerships The author examines persistent racism and white supremacy at school Black parents resistance and ways school communities can engage in more authentic partnerships with Black and Brown families The children in this study attended schools with varying demographics and reputations Their parents were engaged in these schools in the highly visible ways educators and policymakers traditionally say is important for children s education such as proactively communicating with teachers helping with homework and joining PTOs The author argues that because of the relentless anti Black racism Black families experience in schools educators must depart from race evasive approaches and commit to more liberatory family school partnerships Book Features Includes an introduction to CRT and explains how it informed this study Draws from Derrick Bell s notion of racial realism to make sense of Black parent participants advocating for high quality education in the context of persistent anti Black racism Examines how Black parents resisted individualism and were instead committed to improving the education of all marginalized children Shows how white supremacy operated in shared school governance despite schools having inclusive practices Explores how anxiety and stress caused by the Trump presidency impacted parents school engagement Describes three ways any school community can develop family school partnerships for collective educational justice Resources in Education ,1997 The Urban Principal Van Cleve Morris,1981
