The Censor's Hand Carl E. Schneider, 2015-04-10 An argument that the system of boards that license human subject research is so fundamentally misconceived that it inevitably does more harm than good Medical and social progress depend on research with human subjects When that research is done in institutions getting federal money it is regulated often minutely by federally required and supervised bureaucracies called institutional review boards IRBs Do can these IRBs do more harm than good In The Censor's Hand Schneider addresses this crucial but long unasked question Schneider answers the question by consulting a critical but ignored experience the law's learning about regulation and by amassing empirical evidence that is scattered around many literatures He concludes that IRBs were fundamentally misconceived Their usefulness to human subjects is doubtful but they clearly delay distort and deter research that can save people's lives soothe their suffering and enhance their welfare IRBs demonstrably make decisions poorly They cannot be expected to make decisions well for they lack the expertise ethical principles legal rules effective procedures and accountability essential to good regulation And IRBs are censors in the place censorship is most damaging universities In sum Schneider argues that IRBs are bad regulation that inescapably do more harm than good They were an irreparable mistake that should be abandoned so that research can be conducted properly and regulated sensibly

Measuring the Environmental Soundness of Public Procurement in Nordic Countries, 2005 The importance of Greener Public Purchasing GPP has increasingly been recognised by those who work to promote sustainable development In the communication on Integrated Product Policy IPP the EU Commission encourages Member States to draw up publicly available action plans to green their public procurement The Nordic Council of Ministers has stressed the importance of GPP in the strategy for sustainable development and has initiated co ordination efforts so that public buyers in all the Nordic countries can benefit from each other's experience The aim of this study was to develop a method to measure the environmental soundness of public procurement and to produce information on the kind of environmental criteria that are used for different product groups The study also focused on the situation of greener public procurement in Denmark Finland Norway and Sweden more specifically on the larger public purchases which are governed by directives The results showed that public purchasers seek to consider environmental aspects quite often However attention needs to be paid to how relevant product specific environmental aspects are defined and the criteria formulated
