

BLEEDING WOUNDS

Always treat cut or other cut or laceration by the bleeding first. Stop the bleeding quickly by one of the methods outlined here. The more serious the cut or laceration, the more likely it is to be a serious one. Stop any of bleeding can be controlled by applying pressure to the wound site. After cleaning the wound and above the level of the heart if possible.

- Check wound to ensure there are no embedded objects.
- Apply clean dressing over the bleeding point and secure the dressing over the wound. If blood seeps through add a second dressing. If blood seeps through again, remove dressing and start again, ensuring that pressure is applied directly over the injury.
- Once unable to stop cut or laceration by direct pressure, raise and support the limb or injured area.
- Check circulation below the bandaging or splinting. Always check both sides simultaneously and ensure pulse is made more distal than is not affected.

If an infectious object is present, do not remove object. Wash edges of the wound together first in the liquid to control severe bleeding.

- If possible, turn victim to down and raise the wound above the level of the heart.
- After bleeding subsides, dress a piece of gauze over the wound and for embedded object. This usually held in place by a splint or other side of the object to keep it from moving and you can manage the area without putting pressure on it.
- Keep exposed area as still as possible during transport to a medical facility.

Examine the wound to see if it is a laceration or a deep cut. If it is a laceration, it is a deep cut. If it is a deep cut, it is a laceration. If it is a laceration, it is a deep cut. If it is a deep cut, it is a laceration.

- To prepare a tourniquet, use a flat or 1/2 in. (1.3 cm) piece of cloth or bandaging.
- Wrap it around the limb above the wound. Do not wrap too tight. If possible, use a piece of cloth or bandaging to hold the ends of the cloth in place. If it is a laceration, it is a deep cut. If it is a deep cut, it is a laceration.

- Secure the distal end by tying an overhand knot. If possible, use a piece of cloth or bandaging to hold the ends of the cloth in place.
- If you are not transporting the victim to the hospital, use a piece of cloth or bandaging to hold the ends of the cloth in place.

Always monitor wound for signs of infection, including swelling, pain, redness and pus. If you see any of these signs, seek medical help ASAP.
