Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact aerobically fit individuals. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 12 females, 12 males, and 12 females, all of whom were aerobically fit. The subjects were divided into three groups: low-intensity, low-impact, and low-impact. The subjects were tested at baseline and after 12 weeks. The results showed that the low-intensity group had a significant increase in heart rate, while the low-impact and low-impact groups did not. The results also showed that the low-intensity group had a significant increase in oxygen consumption, while the low-impact and low-impact groups did not. The results suggest that low-intensity exercise is more effective than low-impact exercise for improving aerobic fitness in aerobically fit individuals.
