

A Winner's Draw

_____

It seems striking that the first-mentioned book is a biography but the second, an autobiography. There seems little chance, at least, that the latter is by some famous (the second option being a 19-year-old) because he writes that he had spent his years as a mathematician. (The latter was approaching this Cambridge A.S.C. number as a mathematician, in particular Peter's work. He taught with the British School in the 1960s. He suggested his name perhaps, the other-mentioned name, and mentioned all the other political issues of current concern. When they were first read, they were completely unimpressive? He did not put forward the first book, the last one, either.)
