The organization was founded in 1950, under the name National Defense Science and Engineering Graduate Fellowship Program and changed shape when the program moved within the institution to Biological Sciences. The program was a 2-3 year fellowship to the best of the best young people from all the top science departments in the country. The program was then merged, as mentioned, with the program for the young scientists returning from military service and the National Science Foundation. Following the merger, we were left with graduate students who had been brilliant in the college but as scientists and research scientists they had no talent whatsoever. Our superb scientists, the talent that brought back the great research, the scientific talent, the people who were brilliant in the college but as scientists and research scientists they had no talent whatsoever.
