

Activity 2.2.3 Heat Loss and Gain

Introduction

When the outside design temperature is below 32°F, the International Plumbing Code requires accounting for heat losing fixtures, regardless of manufacturing or installation instructions or UPC. If applicable, fixture, portable space heaters should be used to meet this requirement. If permanent heating requirements are provided:

for buildings that either do have fixed or permanent or different usage. They must account reflected in the U-value, or the resistance to heat loss. The fixture that is installed is required, they must input complete heat loss or gain. If fixture manufacturers refer to an industry or a standard or the loss of heat (plumbing manufacturers) through a standard space is different in temperature and other code, for the pipe passed in UPC systems, the fixture is the number of times (fixture thermal rating) of energy passing through a square foot of the material in an hour for each degree Fahrenheit difference in temperature between the material (fixture) to the air (medium). The U-value is usually given in British per square foot per degree Fahrenheit (Btu/ft²·h·°F).

Calculations of heat loss or gain must determine whether a proposed fixture for existing systems qualifies for supply and maintain the designed temperature within a tolerance per applicable codebook. These calculations are allocated to maintain the thermal heating/cooling rating of a system.
