

Activity 2.1.1 Wood Frame Systems

Introduction

Wood provides the most versatile natural material for structural systems for construction of modern buildings. Frames are often constructed with a wood frame, especially if the space frame can adequately supply the desired shape of the building structure. However, advanced technology can create frame buildings as well as wood. Different materials, however, exhibit different differences, such as whether the material has a high strength-to-weight ratio, or whether it is a different type of material. Wood frame construction has been used for many years. It is still a common material, and is also used for the construction of modern buildings. It is still a common material, and is also used for the construction of modern buildings. It is still a common material, and is also used for the construction of modern buildings.

Equipment:

- Independent service reference reading

Procedure:

In this activity, you will use available resources to identify the primary parts of a traditional wood-frame structure and their interaction in the production of a building.
