Expanding the 40-hour requirement to a longer period for the program, and over the period of 2008-2010, will significantly reduce the likelihood of students for the program leaving the program. The program will also require more students that will be entering the workforce, which will be a benefit to the program.

Along the way, we've already seen an AC system (GAT-HIT) put to work on a non-trivial problem. One of the other main AC systems is parallel with a 128 -bit coprocessor to perform the binary add. Important issues posed by the hardware are a good match, period, and how to handle values $> 2^{128}$ in AC arithmetic with a fixed 128 -bit word size. We'll return to this in a moment. For the moment, let's consider the AC system (GAT) as a coprocessor. It is capable of doing both AC and integer arithmetic. Integer arithmetic is done using integer instructions (shifts, adds, multiplies, divides, etc.). AC instructions are executed by the AC coprocessor. The AC coprocessor is connected to the bus and can be accessed by the AC program as well as programs running on the host. AC programs and integer instructions must be loaded sequentially in a block system.
