A Hindu Creation Tale

The Birth of the Cosmos A Hindu Creation Tale

Long, long ago, Lord Vishnu created the different universes. In each universe, he lay down in a position of bliss. At first, when time began, there was only darkness. Vishnu is sometimes called Lord Brahma, the creator and the source of all things, by his devotees.

While Lord Vishnu dozed peacefully, there existed nothing. Then, Vishnu stirred and awakened. He commenced the creation of the world and everything in it four quarters.

First, he fashioned the gods of the sky—the sun, the moon, and stars, the sea. Placing them in the heavens, he walked east and west. Following this, he brought forth Agni, the god of fire, Vayu, the wind, and Varuna, the ocean.

Over the ocean, Lord Vishnu gently placed a glowing golden egg. Boiling gently in the water, the egg began to grow and grow.

It continued to expand for a whole year until, one day, it started to crack—wider and wider—until it split right open. From its golden interior, Lord Vishnu emerged, adorned in shining light. He divided the egg into two halves, placing one above as the arch of the sky and the other below as the earth. Then, he fashioned human beings to inhabit the earth, created in the golden shell of the now-empty egg.

And so, the world came into existence. However, it is believed that when Lord Vishnu falls asleep again, his creation will dissolve into nothing, and the human world as we know it will cease to exist.

Hinduism features a multitude of gods and goddesses, with those of the most significant being Vishnu, Brahma, and Shiva. Brahma (depicted in the accompanying image) is viewed as the creator of the world. Vishnu assumes the role of the protector, while Shiva is entrusted with the major ability of destroying the universe, paving the way for its subsequent recreation. This cycle of creation and destruction is integral to the Hindu cosmology.
