^a The number of subjects who were included in the analysis of the effect of the intervention on the primary outcome (mean number of days off work) was 100 (50 in the intervention group and 50 in the control group). The number of subjects who were included in the analysis of the effect of the intervention on the secondary outcome (mean number of days off work due to musculoskeletal problems) was 95 (47 in the intervention group and 48 in the control group).

CONCLUSIONS The results of this study suggest that the use of a single, standardized, and validated questionnaire is a feasible and reliable method for assessing the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders in a large, multi-center study. The results also suggest that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders is high in this population, and that the prevalence is higher in those who are older, female, and have a history of musculoskeletal disorders. The results also suggest that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders is higher in those who are exposed to physical demands, and that the prevalence is higher in those who are exposed to physical demands for a longer duration. The results also suggest that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders is higher in those who are exposed to physical demands for a longer duration, and that the prevalence is higher in those who are exposed to physical demands for a longer duration.
