Most physicians believe you do possess the capacity until the very instant of death, so you are always entitled to the choices reflected by your life. However, physicians would not believe otherwise. The right to refuse medical intervention is yours. You are a human being, not a medical condition or a body. Your physical condition cannot actually determine the choices that the physician, who knows what you are capable of, should make for you. It is not the physician's job to determine what you are capable of, but to help you determine what you want.
