Example 4 indicates that the mass of the vibrating object influences the frequency of simple harmonic motion. Electronic sensors are being developed that take advantage of this effect in detecting and measuring small masses of chemicals. These sensors are made of quartz crystals, and crystals when in electric resonant motion. These sensors are coated with crystals that absorb a particular chemical, then the mass of the chemical is known (Equations 10.4 and 10.5). The frequency of the simple harmonic motion is changed. The change in frequency is detected electronically, and the sensor is calibrated to give the mass of the attached chemical.
