

Job Interview Questions and Answers

Question: What are the typical duties of a registered nurse?

Answer: Nurses implement healthcare plans and keep patient records and reports. They cannot make diagnoses, but they do monitor vital signs and symptoms and report them. They can then modify care plans, according to their observations, patient response, and the advice of the doctor.

Question: What personal qualifications should a registered nurse possess, besides professional training?

Answer: Nurses are patient and emotionally intelligent. They are efficient and organized, and kind at all times. It is as much the job of the nurse to offer sympathy to the patient as it is to perform the more technical tasks, such as administering injections and taking temperature.

Question: Do you think interpersonal communication is important to the profession of a registered nurse?

Answer: Nurses interact both with patients and with other medical personnel. Communication skills are very important. Patients require tolerance and sensitivity. Medical personnel require team work, coordination and cooperation, and clearly communicated information which facilitates planning and implementing adequate care plans.

Question: Do you have experience with administrative duties and team work?

Answer: Nurses do not usually work alone. They are part of a team of medical personnel. More experienced or senior nurses manage units or shifts, and instruct and supervise new employees. They keep an eye on other nurses to make sure care is administered properly.

Question: Do you have experience preparing facilities and equipment?

Answer: Nurses maintain stocks and inventories, arrange rooms and equipment, and prepare sterilized instruments prior to its usage by patients or other medical personnel. This is not as simple as it sounds, because it requires attention and experience to know when a room is required and which specific piece of equipment might be the most important, which is something doctors do not always have the time to explain.

Interview Questions and Answers for a Staff Nurse

Question: How would you describe the primary duties of a staff nurse?

Answer: The primary duties of a staff nurse include facilitating and monitoring patient progress towards recovery, charting progress, giving medication, and making sure patients are comfortable.
