

Quality and Safety Education for Nurses (QSEN) is a project designed to empower baccalaureate prepared nurses to apply basic goals of quality, safety, informatics, patient centered care and evidence based practice into the healthcare environment. Each competency is defined by specific targets for knowledge, skills and attitudes nurses should aspire to. The purpose of this paper is to discover how QSEN competencies guide nursing interventions in a simulated environment.

Overview of QSEN Competencies

Patient centered care describes the ability to recognize the patient or designee as the source of control and full partner in providing compassionate and coordinated care based on respect for patient's preferences, values, and needs (QSEN Institute, 2014). Nurses should understand multiple aspects of patient centered care including communication, individual values, coordination between different care delivery systems, and cultural diversity. Proficient skills for a nurse to execute patient centered care involves the ability to infer individual patient preferences and values through therapeutic communication (QSEN Institute, 2014). A nurse should be able to effectively communicate these wishes to others members of the care team and identify barriers to care that are a function of the individual's cultural, lifestyle or health scenario. QSEN guidelines recommends nurses should be able to communicate and advocate for patient needs at varying levels of care and across transitions of care delivery systems (QSEN Institute, 2014). Nursing attitudes to guide patient centered care should reflect ideas which value the patient health experience as a function of their individual cultural and ethnic experience. Nurses who approach the patient experience as a learning opportunity to improve advocacy are compliant with QSEN guidelines for patient centered care.
