

Open Access Journals: Advantages

Advantages: Immediate, permanent, open access; no subscription fees; no page charges

- Higher visibility and frequency

Disadvantages

- Peer-reviewed journals have similar or identical peer-reviewing standards
- Journal-publishing companies make a lot of money
- Limited publishing
 - Micro-publishing is suitable for researchers from many domains (multidisciplinary research) who are interested (e.g. for gene therapy, stem cell research)
 - Micro-publishing is often paid with a subscription (which puts some financial pressure on authors) (although publishing is not really for financial gain)
 - Publishing through a journal from many fields for one, interdisciplinary research, is not possible, therefore, we publish related articles through related journals, which are supported, or subscription companies, can then be used for publishing related articles

Open Access Publishing

1. Researcher publishes the manuscript free of charge
2. Researcher receives copyright, research funding
3. Publishing costs are covered
 - Usually, the publisher covers the publishing costs (which are the journal)
4. The work is available to all researchers, students, etc.
5. Researcher publishes the journal with the journal cover
6. Researcher can also charge for the journal for a specific research or subject or subject is covered

Open Access

- Online journals are available at no cost to researchers, but not all journals

Open Access Journals

- Online journals are available at no cost to researchers
- Some journals are available, and others are not (e.g. some journals)
- Journals are not available for research funding
- Journals are not available for research funding
- Some journals are available for research funding
- Some journals are available for research funding
