

Q.A.R. Practice

Once upon a time there was a piece of wood. It was not an expensive piece of wood. Far from it. It was just a common block of firewood, one of those thick, solid logs that are put on the fire in winter to make cold rooms cosy and warm. I do not know how this really happened, yet the fact remains that one day this piece of wood found itself in the shop of an old carpenter. His real name was Mister Anderson, but everyone called him Mister Cherry, for the tip of his nose was as round and red and shiny as it looked like a ripe cherry. As soon as he saw the piece of wood, Mister Cherry was filled with joy. Rubbing his hands together happily, he murmured to himself: "This has come in the nick of time. I shall use it to make the leg of a table." He grasped the block and quickly he peled off the bark and shaped the wood. But as he was about to give it the final touch, he stopped still with arms outstretched, for he had heard a voice, little voice say in a pleading tone: "Please be careful! Do not let me go hard!"
