Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 1000 kcal energy deficit diet on body composition and metabolic health in 10 obese women. The diet was designed to provide 1000 kcal less than the estimated energy requirement, based on the Mifflin-St. Jeor equation. The diet was divided into two phases: a 6-week phase of low-carbohydrate, high-protein diet (LCHP) and a 6-week phase of low-fat, high-carbohydrate diet (LFHC). The LCHP phase resulted in a greater loss of fat mass and a greater improvement in insulin sensitivity compared to the LFHC phase. The LFHC phase resulted in a greater loss of lean mass and a greater improvement in blood pressure compared to the LCHP phase. The results suggest that a low-carbohydrate, high-protein diet may be more effective for improving body composition and metabolic health in obese women.

Abstract—This study examined the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the health-related quality of life (HRQL) of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The program was designed to improve physical and psychological health, and to reduce the impact of COPD on daily life. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results showed that the program had a positive effect on HRQL, with significant improvements in physical and psychological health, and a reduction in the impact of COPD on daily life. The program was well-tolerated and had a low risk of adverse effects. The findings suggest that a supervised exercise program can be an effective intervention for improving HRQL in older adults with COPD.
