

Respiratory System Physiology

Alveolar Ventilation and Gas Exchange

1. What is the primary factor determining alveolar ventilation? Alveolar ventilation is determined by the rate of breathing (tidal volume) and the dead space volume.
2. How does alveolar ventilation change during exercise? Alveolar ventilation increases proportionally to the increase in metabolic rate.

Alveolar ventilation is the volume of air that reaches the alveoli per minute. It is determined by the tidal volume (the volume of air inhaled or exhaled during each breath) and the dead space volume (the volume of air that does not participate in gas exchange). During exercise, alveolar ventilation increases to meet the increased demand for oxygen and removal of carbon dioxide.

3. What are the partial pressures of oxygen and carbon dioxide in alveolar air? Partial pressure of oxygen is approximately 100 mmHg and partial pressure of carbon dioxide is approximately 40 mmHg.
4. How does the partial pressure of oxygen in arterial blood change during exercise? It increases from approximately 95 mmHg at rest to approximately 98 mmHg during exercise.

The partial pressure of oxygen in arterial blood is determined by the partial pressure of oxygen in alveolar air and the efficiency of gas exchange. During exercise, the partial pressure of oxygen in arterial blood increases due to increased alveolar ventilation and increased perfusion of the lungs.

Respiratory Volumes and Capacities: Spirometry

5. What is the difference between tidal volume and functional residual capacity? Tidal volume is the volume of air inhaled or exhaled during a normal breath. Functional residual capacity is the volume of air remaining in the lungs after a normal expiration.
6. How does the volume of air in the lungs change during a normal expiration? It decreases from approximately 2.5 L at the end of inspiration to approximately 1.2 L at the end of expiration.
7. What is the total capacity of the lungs? The total capacity of the lungs is approximately 5.8 L.
