Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 12 women, 40 to 50 years old, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or other medical problems. They were randomly assigned to a 12-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of 30 minutes of moderate-intensity aerobic exercise. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week period. The results showed that the training program significantly increased the HR and EE of the subjects compared to the control group. The HR increased from 68 to 78 beats per minute, and the EE increased from 1,800 to 2,200 kcal per day. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively increase the HR and EE of sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night periods that are longer than the standard 24 hours occur most commonly with the use of artificial or non-natural light sources. To avoid this, there are laws in the province that regulate the use of artificial light.
- Increased exposure to light will also negatively affect the ability of the brain to regulate sleep, the length of the awake phase may be disrupted for the next several days after that.
- The end of the night sleep is disrupted, the body may change the phase of the circadian rhythm, producing a condition known as jet lag.
- Sleep deprivation is not suitable for those periods of extended, constant, light, but is acceptable for the 50 minutes a night.
