This activity describes what researchers have learned about the special abilities of the left and right sides of the brain. You will learn how information is processed in these two hemispheres and about the unique functions of each.

Hemispheric Connections

What links the sides of the brain? Fibers connecting the left and right hemispheres of the brain are called corpus callosum.

Left hemisphere: language, reading, writing, arithmetic, logic, analysis, planning, problem-solving, sequential processing, fine motor control, spatial reasoning, memory, attention, decision-making, social interaction, emotional regulation, personality, and identity.

Right hemisphere: spatial reasoning, visual processing, memory, attention, decision-making, social interaction, emotional regulation, personality, and identity.

How do the sides of the brain work together to perform functions that require both sides?

Both sides of the brain work together to perform functions that require both sides. The left side of the brain is specialized for language, logic, and sequential processing. The right side of the brain is specialized for spatial reasoning, visual processing, and memory.

Right Hemisphere Research

Research on the right hemisphere of the brain has shown that it is involved in a variety of functions, including spatial reasoning, visual processing, memory, attention, decision-making, social interaction, emotional regulation, personality, and identity.

A right hemisphere stroke can cause a variety of symptoms, including difficulty with spatial reasoning, visual processing, memory, attention, decision-making, social interaction, emotional regulation, personality, and identity.

In an additional experiment, people are asked to draw a picture of the left hemisphere of the brain. They are given the names of the structures and are asked to draw the structures. The results show that the right hemisphere is involved in spatial reasoning, visual processing, memory, attention, decision-making, social interaction, emotional regulation, personality, and identity.
