2. In the introduction, it says that opportunity gap is an educational gap that occurs because students learn differently.

Teachers have to use data to understand students' learning differences and use it to create a. what makes them different?

Individuals (students) and entire schools/districts

b. what are the differences between them?

It discusses factors that influence learning (what's affecting students) and the other thing, (what's affecting the learning) changing how learning takes place

Individual differences and why have students that learn differently, mostly it's a mix of

a. those born differently wired?

My brain works by itself you are giving up

b. what else is different? and why?

Environment (what's affecting us) and our internal factors

Teachers, teaching whether student has any talent or not, it's about using students' unique talents or strengths at the moment

c. what else makes them different (unique background)?

It's the little differences (background things) and what school and how you
