Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and heart rate reserve (HRR) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a training group (TRN). The TRN group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The HR and HRR were measured at rest and during submaximal exercise at the beginning and end of the training period. The results showed that the TRN group had a significant increase in HR and HRR compared to the CON group. The increase in HR was 10.5% and the increase in HRR was 15.5%. The results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the cardiovascular fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men.

If you are not satisfied with your results, follow the instructions carefully and test your original article. If the referee's comments are of the "I'm sorry, but no" and/or "no serious improvements required" variety, it will be almost impossible to revise the
