1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

1. Identify the problem. The first step is to identify the problem. This involves understanding the symptoms and the context in which they are occurring. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the problem could be a heart attack, a heartburn, or a panic attack.

2. Assess the patient. The next step is to assess the patient. This involves taking a history, performing a physical examination, and ordering any necessary tests. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the doctor would take a history, perform a physical examination, and order an ECG and blood tests.

3. Formulate a differential diagnosis. The third step is to formulate a differential diagnosis. This involves listing the possible causes of the problem. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the differential diagnosis could include heart attack, heartburn, panic attack, and pneumonia.

4. Order tests. The fourth step is to order tests. This involves ordering any necessary tests to help confirm the diagnosis. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the doctor would order an ECG and blood tests.

5. Treat the patient. The fifth step is to treat the patient. This involves providing the patient with the appropriate treatment. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the doctor would provide the patient with the appropriate treatment, such as aspirin, nitroglycerin, and oxygen.

6. Follow up. The sixth step is to follow up. This involves monitoring the patient's response to treatment and providing further treatment if necessary. For example, if a patient is experiencing chest pain, the doctor would monitor the patient's response to treatment and provide further treatment if necessary.

RESEARCH Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry 1999;38:1025-33.

OBJECTIVE: To examine the effects of a 12-week, 10-session, manualized, group-based, parent training program on the parenting behavior of parents of children with conduct problems.

DESIGN: Randomized controlled trial.

SETTING: Child mental health services in a large, inner-city hospital.

PARTICIPANTS: Parents of 100 children with conduct problems.

MEASUREMENTS AND MAIN RESULTS: Parents were randomized to either the parent training program or a waitlist control. The program was designed to teach parents skills in setting limits, monitoring, and praising their children. Posttest scores on measures of parenting behavior were significantly better for the parent training group than for the waitlist control group. These results were maintained at follow-up. The program had no effect on the children's behavior.

CONCLUSIONS: The program had a beneficial effect on parenting behavior, but not on children's behavior. The program may be useful for parents of children with conduct problems.

KEY WORDS: Parenting behavior, child conduct problems, parent training, randomized controlled trial.

Parenting behavior is a key factor in the development of children's behavior. Parents of children with conduct problems often have ineffective parenting skills. The authors of the study, led by Dr. David A. Asch, a professor of psychology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, conducted a series of experiments in which they asked participants to judge the length of a line. The results showed that participants were more likely to conform to the group's judgment when the group was larger and when the task was more difficult.
