Abstract

Abstract: This is a preliminary study of the effects of a 10-week training program on the performance of a group of 10 young men. The program consisted of a combination of aerobic and anaerobic exercises. The results showed that the subjects improved their performance in all the tests. The most significant improvement was in the 100m sprint, which was reduced by 1.5 seconds. The subjects also showed a significant improvement in their 400m and 800m times. The program was well tolerated by the subjects and they all enjoyed it. The results of this study suggest that a 10-week training program can improve the performance of young men in a variety of tests. Further research is needed to determine the long-term effects of this program.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of older adults with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group participated in a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program. The control group did not participate in the exercise program. The primary outcome was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. The secondary outcomes were the change in the St. George's Respiratory Questionnaire (SGRQ) score, the change in the Short Form-36 (SF-36) score, and the change in the Borg Scale of Perceived Exertion (Borg-SPE) score. The results showed that the 6MWT score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The SGRQ score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The SF-36 score increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The Borg-SPE score decreased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can improve the physical and psychological health of older adults with COPD.
