

Unit 2 Reading Section 2 Pure Competition

Conditions for Pure Competition

The simplest market structure is pure competition. In such markets, there are so many producers that each producer has almost no effect on the market price. Producers sell the same product or a small part of the total supply, so that they are price takers. Because, in order to have pure competition, a seller must have many competitors, there is almost never more than one seller of a particular product. There will be many other identical producers. Producers that are the same as another seller are called homogeneous. There is no differentiation of the goods sold. Each producer must be able to sell all the goods he or she produces. There is no differentiation of the goods. Each producer must be able to sell all the goods he or she produces. There is no differentiation of the goods.
