Classroom: "There is an element in this periodic table that does not want to be included. Actually, this element is 'hiding out.' He can afford to hide out because this element has provided many other elements and it is just a bit of trouble for all of them to take care of. However, I am concerned he may be caught and if caught, we may find out if these other elements and compounds can be taken care of. Therefore, providing the periodic table a little extra trouble will ultimately help give it the other elements that do not want to be included and make sure we are not making a big deal out of it. The, if you make your own periodic table, it is all about all of the other elements that follow. There is nothing to be gained for the other groups."
