

18.2 Modern Evolutionary Classifications

Learning Objectives

- LO1 Explain the difference between phylogenetic classification and taxonomic classification.
- LO2 Distinguish between sister and outgroup relationships.
- LO3 Explain the use of DNA sequence in classification.

Learning Objectives

Phylogenetic use of the classification: The study of evolutionary relationships among organisms is called phylogenetics. Classifications based on evolutionary relationships is called phylogenetic classification or evolutionary classification.

- 1. Evolutionary classification places organisms into higher taxa based on shared characters and lower ranks reflective of taxonomic rank. This is in contrast to taxonomic rank where the higher the rank, the higher the level of complexity. Shared characters provide:
- 2. In the context of taxonomy, an shared character called a synapomorph, is a trait or a group of traits that includes a single taxonomic category and all descendants of that category. It does not include any other taxonomic group. A synapomorphic group includes all species that are descended from a common ancestor, and descendants are species that are not descended from that common ancestor.

Cladogram: A cladogram is a diagram that shows how species or higher taxa are related to each other. A cladogram shows three evolutionary traits or changes, from the root to the terminal categories.

- 1. In a cladogram, the place where the vertical lineage splits is called a node, or a node. Nodes represent the point where two things that shared a common ancestor.
- 2. The bottom of the diagram is the root, representing the common ancestor of all the organisms in the cladogram.
- 3. Cladistics usually refers to specific characters, or characters. A character is a trait that exists in the most recent common ancestor of a particular clade and was passed on to all the descendants.

How to Characterization: All organisms have DNA. Because DNA is so variable across all forms of life, the molecule can be compared to different species. In general, the more similar species/organisms are, species share the same genetic information. Shared is common, meaning similar across forms related to it.
