1. When helping a patient limit exposure to allergens, what should the nurse be sure the patient understands?

How to administer allergy shots

The symptoms of anaphylactic shock

The possible reservoirs and sources of allergens

Whether the patient's type of allergy is contagious - The possible reservoirs and sources of allergens

The patient should understand where allergens that cause an immune response may exist in order to decrease exposure to these allergens. Proper administration of allergy shots does not limit exposure to the allergen. Allergies are not contagious. Teaching symptoms of anaphylactic shock are important, but this does not help the patient in limiting exposure to the allergen
