The performing arts enrich our lives and make them better. Art often reflects life, and sometimes points out the good and bad in society. A world without the performing arts would be a sad place.

The performing arts not only entertains us, but makes us think about the important things in life. Imagine a world without dance, music, or theatre. Performing artists express themselves through dancing, singing, playing instruments, and acting. They are able to use their imagination to create something new and exciting. Audiences are told stories through the performing arts, and stories reflect our lives, values, and culture.

As a ballet dancer, I've learned how to discipline myself which is an important life skill. Busy dancers must schedule their time carefully, practice technique, take care of their bodies to keep them healthy, and attend classes and rehearsals.

Our communities are richer because of the performing arts. Dance, music, and theatre entertains us, teaches us life lessons, and enriches our history and culture.

The Reading Crisis Jeanne Sternlicht CHALL, Vicki A. Jacobs, Luke E. Baldwin, Jeanne Sternlicht Chall, 2009-06-30 How severe is the literacy gap in our schools? Why does the nine-year-old child from a culturally disadvantaged background so often fall victim to the fourth-grade slump? Although the cognitive abilities of these children at risk may be consistent with the norm, their literacy development lags far behind that of other children. In The Reading Crisis, the renowned reading specialist Jeanne Chall and her colleagues examine the causes of this disparity and suggest some remedies. Using Chall's widely applied model of reading development, the authors examine the strengths and weaknesses in the reading, writing, and language development of children from low-income families in an attempt to identify the onset of their difficulties. They show how, in the transition from learning the medium to understanding the message, the demands on children's reading skills become significantly more complex. The crucial point is fourth grade, when students confront texts containing unfamiliar words and ideas that are beyond the range of their own experience. According to Chall's findings, the lack of specific literacy skills, not cognitive factors, explains the deceleration in the reading and writing development of low-income children. The authors outline an active role for the schools in remedying weaknesses in literacy development and give suggestions for the home and the community. Their recommendations address both practical issues in instruction and the teacher-student dynamic that fosters literacy development.
