Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Birth rate is the number of children born per 1,000 people in a population. The birth rate is a key factor in determining whether a population is growing, staying the same, or declining. A high birth rate usually leads to population growth.

Change in population is the difference between the number of people born and the number of people who die. If the number of people born is greater than the number of people who die, the population will grow. If the number of people born is less than the number of people who die, the population will decline. If the number of people born is equal to the number of people who die, the population will stay the same.

Carrying capacity is the maximum number of individuals that an environment can support. It is determined by the availability of resources such as food, water, and space. If a population exceeds its carrying capacity, it will experience a decline.
