QUESTION 1 [20]

Discuss the risk factors for, the pathogenesis of, and the consequences of, coronary artery atherosclerosis and comment on the possible causes and the subsequent pathologic findings that could occur with a total serum cholesterol of 268 mg/dl.

In the cardiovascular diseases called Coronary artery atherosclerosis, there is an accumulation of inflammatory cells, fatty deposits and cholesterol and other substance within the walls of coronary arteries. This accumulation will cause the arteries to harden and become narrow reducing the amount of blood flow to the heart. This can cause diseases like angina or myocardial infarctions.

Risk Factors for Coronary Artery Atherosclerosis:

1. High Blood Cholesterol Levels: Elevated levels of low-density lipoprotein cholesterol (LDL-C) and total cholesterol are significant risk factors. A total serum cholesterol level of 268 mg/dl is considered high. LDL cholesterol can deposit in the arterial walls and initiate atherosclerotic plaque formation.
2. Hypertension: High blood pressure can damage the inner lining of arteries, making them more susceptible to plaque formation.
3. Smoking: Smoking tobacco products can cause damage to the blood vessel walls, and oxidative stress leading to inflammation and increased plaque buildup.
4. Diabetes: diabetic patients have a higher risk of atherosclerosis due to elevated blood sugar levels, which can damage blood vessels over time and lead to metabolic disturbance.
5. Obesity: Excess body weight, especially abdominal obesity, insulin resistance and inflammation, is associated with an increased risk of atherosclerosis.
