Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health measures included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The psychological health measures included the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI). The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly reduced heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The walking program also significantly reduced the BDI and STAI scores. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Authors were asked to provide a short summary of their research. The summary was to be written in a way that was accessible to a general audience. The summary was to be written in a way that was accessible to a general audience.
