Needle, Ball, and Alcohol: The Second Great Fleet Biplane Excursion Phill Bragg, 2014-12-29 In an antique open cockpit biplane pilot Phill Bragg and his friend Wayland Cooke fly across the United States during the hot summer of 2012 After enduring delays for a whole year they finally depart from northeastern North Carolina in search of old friends in Greensburg Kansas whose town was demolished by a relentless tornado one tragic night Their high flying adventure takes them across the Appalachian Mountains and into the heart of America's breadbasket navigating with a bobbing alcohol compass and windblown paper charts in their laps With a humble sense of humor and lots of patience they share a seldom seen perspective of what flying used to be like in the old days as well as what it can still be like today In the quest to find their friends they make many new ones along the way and unexpectedly stumble onto airports that are hidden jewels of grassroots aviation Across the Great Plains and then back home again their trusty Fleet biplane motors along taking them on a journey above America that symbolizes the many wonderful freedoms we so often take for granted

Bragg, 2018-01-06 A year has passed since the Second Great Fleet Biplane Excursion and now Phill Bragg attempts to fly his trusty Fleet Finch to a venerable grassroots gathering of antique and classic airplanes on a farm in rural Iowa For the Third Great Fleet Biplane Excursion pilot and airplane must again cross the Appalachian Mountains to head northwest into middle America for an aeronautical celebration that has been held annually for sixty years But this cross country flight presents more obstacles than ever before and it is never certain they will arrive in time But embracing the old adage that it is the journey and not the destination which rewards the traveler Phill and his Fleet biplane persevere as best they can and they are never disappointed by the wonderful new friends they find or by the vast unending beauty of the United States
