patients As a consequence of the intrinsic chromosomal and genetic instability of the tumor genome it is generally believed that tailoring of chemotherapy in cancer patients might be achieved by molecular analysis of patient tumor DNA In addition to reduce the toxicity risk of patients the tumor DNA information should be integrated with the available data on polymorphic drug metabolizing enzyme and transporter genes mediating the exposure of patients to active drugs and or their active metabolites The chapters of this book clearly show how DNA information from both the host germline and the tumor should be taken into account for rational selection of drug therapies in cancer patients an aspect that received little attention despite its importance The availability of new molecular approaches to the selection of drug therapy is an emerging need because the traditional approach based on the evaluation of patient and tumor characteristics is clearly far from optimal Many treated patients do not experience significant benefits from the treatment while they often experience moderate to severe toxicities In addition the development and clinical use of novel molecularly targeted agents alone or in combination with classical cytotoxic therapy requires the understanding of the molecular features of the tumors and the identification of tumor markers of response
