

Keystone Species

Saguaro Cactus

What is a keystone species?

A keystone species is a species that has a disproportionately large effect on its environment relative to its abundance. The concept was developed by ecologist Robert Paine in 1969, based on his studies of the Pacific Northwest intertidal community. The keystone species in this community was the sea star, which preyed on the mussel. The sea star's presence kept the mussel population in check, allowing other species to thrive. If the sea star were removed, the mussel population would explode, and the community would be dominated by mussels.

The Saguaro Cactus is a keystone species in the Sonoran Desert. It provides food and shelter for many animals, including birds, lizards, and snakes. The cactus also plays a role in the water cycle, storing water in its thick stems and releasing it slowly over time. Without the Saguaro Cactus, the desert ecosystem would be very different.

Why is the Saguaro a keystone species?

The Saguaro Cactus is a keystone species because it has a large impact on its environment. It provides food and shelter for many animals, and it plays a role in the water cycle. Without the Saguaro Cactus, the desert ecosystem would be very different.
