

Study Guide: Physical and Chemical Oceanography

Effective composition of seawater is determined by:

- 1) seawater volume - given volume of homogeneous mixture with known initial composition during evaporation, condensation, sublimation, desublimation, or other phase transitions
- 2) fluxes - transfer resulting through both the ocean from atmosphere, lithosphere, hydrosphere, and ice involving sublimation, evaporation, condensation, precipitation, and all chemical processes
- 3) biological processes - phytoplankton and zooplankton contribute to the oxygen and nitrogen, and therefore, the chemical composition of seawater through uptake of these

Effective composition and properties are affected by:

- 1) temperature - affects solubility, density, viscosity
- 2) salinity - affects density, viscosity, freezing point, boiling point, etc.

How temperature and salinity gradients form in ocean relative to pressure variations:

Temperature differences across ocean layers:

- 1) temperature varies slowly with depth in most areas
- 2) surface, turbulent layer is heating by a surface heat source
- 3) where the temperature decreases rapidly in the ocean, density is affected so as the stratification

Salinity differences across ocean layers:

- 1) surface salinity is lower because the thermal water expands
- 2) water with surface salinity, and lower density, floats above of water with higher density
- 3) density (surface) increases as salinity in the water increases
- 4) the stratification which forms is significant change in density as the depth increases

Fluxes:

How water moves and how it is changed as it flows through a flow field.

Evaporation effects:

on the Earth, ocean, atmosphere, and the fluxes.

Sublimation/condensation: is the difference in weight between the water vapor and the water

Fluxes that affect the water: - any process involving the water mass and the water mass:

all processes - evaporation, condensation, sublimation, etc.
